FOR CONSPIRACY.

THREE MEN ARE PLACED ON TRIAL IN THE CITY OF
PITTSBURG.THEY ARE CHARGED WITH DE-
FRAUDING THE NAVY DE-PARTMENT.

Pittsburg, Pa.—The case of Jay Dunn, Charles L. Close and Frank L. Emmett, former employees of the Shelby Steel Tube Co., of Greenville, Pa., charged with conspiracy to defraud the United States government in connection with installing alleged defective tubes on the war vessels Pennsylvania, Louisiana, Maryland, Charleston, Nebraska, Minnesota, Vermont, Washington and Tennessee, was called Monday in the United States district court before Judge Ewing.

The alleged scandal has attracted attention for some years past. One of the defendants, Frank L. Emmett, pleaded guilty Monday and waived a hearing. United States District Attorney Dunkle explained that Emmett had turned state's evidence and some sensational testimony is expected to develop during the trial.

The entire morning session was occupied in the selection of a jury.

The specific charges against the three defendants involve the alleged furnishing of defective boiler tubes to United States naval vessels from the Greenville, Pa., mills of the Shelby Tube Co., by which the defendants were employed.

Over 60 witnesses from different sections of the country have been subpoenaed and the trial is expected to continue throughout the week.

Mr. Dunkle opened with an address to the jury in which he told of the circumstances of the case, including the statement that Emmett had arranged with the government to plead guilty and turn state's evidence and appear as a witness for the prosecution.

He stated that the Shelby Steel Tube Co. had been manufacturing tubes for the navy department since 1898, but that the conspiracy charged was begun in 1902, the defendants being superintendent and assistant superintendent of the Greenville mill of the company.

The alleged plot, he said, continued until 1905, that Dunn was not one of the conspirators during all of that time, but that he knew defective tubes were being furnished for battleships and cruisers.

Mr. Dunkle explained at length the method of making and inspecting the tubes, giving minute descriptions of the latter. He told how the alleged fraud was perpetrated by the defendants having workmen remedy defects in rejected tubes.

RAIDERS WROUGHT RUIN.
Much Property Was Destroyed at Coney Island, N. Y.

New York.—Armed with axes and guarded by a squad of 25 policemen, a gang of men directed by Durbin Van Vleck, assistant commissioner of public works of Brooklyn, descended upon Surf avenue, the main thoroughfare of Coney Island, Monday, and looted off every part of any kind of a building, stand or sign which extended beyond the courtyard line.

While the indignant owners protested, soda fountains were chopped in two, frankfurter stands were torn apart, overhanging signs were pulled down, cane ringers and the dozen different catch-penny devices which line the avenue from end to end were piled into trucks and carted away. When the raiding squad had completed its work the avenue looked as though a cyclone had swept through it, tearing away everything nearer than 20 feet to the curb line. At least 20 truck loads of material were hauled off.

The loss to the owners of these stands will be considerable, as many of them paid extremely high rates for the privilege of maintaining their stands within easy reach of the hundreds of thousands of people who patronize Surf avenue during the season.

Borough President Coler issued an order last week that all the incumbrances extending over the courtyard line must disappear Monday, but none of the owners paid any attention to it.

JAPANESE AN ESKIMO KING.

Wada, Who Cured Arctic Natives, Becomes Their Supreme Potentate.

Mail advices from the arctic say that James Wada, the little Japanese who was released from jail at Nome some time ago because there was a lack of evidence to commit him on a charge of larceny, has left for Icy Cape, where he will assume once more the metaphorical crown and scepter and govern the band of Indians of which he was chief up to the time of his arrest, says the Edmonton correspondent of the Seattle Times.

Wada's story is interesting. He came to the arctic several years ago in a whaling vessel and settled at Icy Cape. Later he went to Herschell Island, but fell into the bad graces of the Indians at that place. In the middle of winter, without food, he started back over the ice and snow for Icy Cape, a distance of several hundred miles.

Wada is a wonderful "musher," and with his rifle managed to kill enough seals to feed himself and dogs. When he arrived at Icy Cape the Indians welcomed him heartily, for there had been much trouble among them ever since his departure. They had fared badly with the traders, who had cheated them, and scourge of sickness had appeared among them. Wada had some knowledge of medicine and hygiene, and by exercising it he saved the lives of many of the Indians. One of them, who was in a trance and thought to be dead, was taken in hand by Wada, and to the astonishment of the natives he recovered. The patient told his companions he had been to the happy hunting grounds and that he had learned the Japanese was a great medicine man or shaman.

Bowing low in humility, the natives offered to make him their chief and to pay him a tribute on all their furs and ivory and other products of the chase. To Wada's credit, it is said, he refused the greater portion of the tribute, but agreed to become their chief. He reigns supreme and lives on the best the district affords.

Why He Burns Old Business Letters.

A Wall street business man showed a visitor a bundle of old letters that he was taking home from his office to burn in his furnace. "I wasn't always so particular about these useless business letters," he said, "until I learned that the women cleaners were sorting them out of the waste baskets, and selling them to certain firms which make a business of furnishing lists of names for various purposes, mostly to speculative concerns. Then I concluded that I owed it to my clients to protect them from the nuisance that follows getting one's name on a mailing list."
